Chris: Hi Diane. Your assistant told me you wanted to see me. Is it about the Magpie project?

Diane: Yeah, it is. It seems like you and your team have missed the deadline. Weren't you supposed to hand it in yesterday?

Chris: Well, we were but we received all the necessary paperwork from the legal department much too late.

Diane: I understand that, and I'm not interested in finger pointing of any kind. You simply need to realise that the project is our top priority right now. Do you need any support from other departments?

Chris: I don't think it's necessary. I've already reorganised my team's schedule for this week. I'm sure we'll have completed the project by Tuesday. Is that OK?

Diane: That would be perfect. See you on Tuesday, then. Bye, Chris.

Chris: Bye, Diane.

So, as you can see, linguists exploring patterns in human communication have encountered several obstacles on their way to determining what influences our choice of words and grammar structures. There have been numerous theories attempting to create a universal model but none of them has been accepted by all linguists. What makes me feel optimistic, though, is the fact that almost every new theory provides new views and insights into the matter in question and brings us closer to finally being able to describe the laws ruling human communication. That's all for today. Thank you very much and see you in two weeks' time.

Reporter: Good morning. With me today in the studio is professor Shtylkovitz – a renowned expert on rock music of the 70's.

Expert: Good morning

Reporter: Professor, what was the greatest song of the decade?

Expert: That's a tough question. Well, if I had to choose one, I'd go for "Stairway to Heaven" by Led Zeppelin. But it could be easily argued that it was "Iron Man" by Black Sabbath or "Child in Time" by Deep Purple.

Reporter: The song must have been a number one hit for many weeks.

Expert: Well, actually, it wasn't released as a single in 1970's so it never got to the charts.

Reporter: That's rather surprising. Let's have a short break and listen to the arguably best song of the 70's.

When I was a little kid I loved the Olympic Games. I remember setting my alarm clock to wake up in the middle of the night and watch athletics or football. I felt extremely excited as I witnessed swimmers beat world records. I wanted to be one of them, so I tried different sports: judo, archery, and basketball. I never got to represent my country, but I have made a lot of friends doing all the sports. Now I barely notice when the Olympic Games begin because I spend most of my time playing or working out with my friends.

Today, I'd like to discuss the matter of teen team sports. It's true that playing team sports teaches young people a lot about competition but some of the lessons they get aren't necessarily pleasant ones. A lot of teenagers dream about scoring the winning basket or goal in the last play of the game. Unfortunately, the reality is that very few kids get to do that. Most of them practise a lot and yet are hardly ever chosen by the coach to be on the roster. When they do make it, they quite often come to the game and sit on the bench because other players are better. Finally, some coaches teach their players how to foul and cheat the referees. That's why it's very important to (wyciszenie)

Wypowiedź 3

My mum has always wanted me to be good at sports. She has taken me to several different sports clubs so that I could see for myself whether I liked any of them. I have already done football, basketball and volleyball. I know she wants me to be happy, but she doesn't seem to understand that I hate depending on others for success. When I win, I don't want to think that their contribution may have been more important than mine. I'd hate having to share the glory with my teammates. That's why I told her that I'm going to join a swimming club next week.

Wypowiedź 4

Some parents would like their children to become successful in a sport so they sign them up for tennis or football classes as early as at the age of 4 or 5. The children practice the chosen sport 5 or 6 times a week to become top athletes one day. However, if you want your child to grow up to be an active person rather than a pro, you should make sure that they have a go at different sports. They need to choose the ones they like most. Let them experience team sports as well as individual ones. And if they decide that they want to do more than one – that's even better as they will develop their bodies and character in a more balanced way.

Interviewer: Hi, everyone – it's Radio Uni and today we're talking to a fresher Josh Williams. Hello, Josh. Why don't you tell us about the first two months at university?

Josh: Oh, I'm doing alright now but it was quite tough at the beginning. On the first day, I got lost a few times. I couldn't find the library and I missed one of the lectures because I went to the wrong building.

Interviewer: So it was a complete disaster, wasn't it?

Josh: Well, actually on that day I met Mandy – my best friend here. If I hadn't got lost, I'd never have got the chance to talk to her. Every cloud has a silver lining, as they say.

Interviewer: I suppose so. Have you got a lot of friends here?

Josh: You know, I can't complain about my social life. Everybody's really cool so I feel totally at home here.

Interviewer: Funny you used this phrase as home's the next thing I'd like to ask you about – are you homesick?

Josh: I was for a month. But, to tell you the truth, I don't miss my parents anymore. I text them from time to time and I'm quite active in social media, so they can see what's happening in my life. Actually, I have a suspicion that they don't worry about me here too much, either. And I'm going back home in two weeks' time anyway.

Interviewer: Ok. Why don't you tell us about the most troublesome aspect of your new life, then?

Josh: I won't surprise you, I guess, when I tell you that it's ... cooking. I never did much of that when I lived with my parents, so I can't really bake, fry or roast.

Interviewer: Do you order a lot of fast food?

Josh: Not any longer. I did for like a week but I put on two kilos in seven days. Another thing was that it was rather pricey. So I started buying different ingredients to make my own food.

Interviewer: And?

Josh: There have been several spectacular failures. On one occasion, I burnt the stew I was making for Mandy and a few friends so badly that the smoke activated the fire alarm. (laughter)

Interviewer: How come?

Josh: Actually, there was a thrilling game on TV and I forgot I was cooking. When the alarm activated, for quite some time, I had no idea it was in my flat.

Interviewer: I see. (laughter) As it's a university radio, I have to ask you about you tutors.

Josh: I love them – seriously. They all seem to care about their subjects and I couldn't enjoy being treated as an adult more. We have to study a lot and there are days when I'm exhausted having spent most of the night preparing for my classes but being here is so much better than secondary school. I just want to say that I mean no disrespect to my secondary school teachers. They were passionate and professional, but I suppose I prefer the university because of this master-student relationship I have with most of the tutors here.

Interviewer: I'm glad to hear that and I think it's a perfect thought to finish our conversation. Thank you and good luck.

Josh: Thank you. Bye.
