Presenter: This morning I'm talking to Thomas Burns, a psychologist. Good morning, Thomas.

Psychologist: Good morning.

Presenter: Thomas, would you mind telling us what you specialise in?

Psychologist: Of course. I help people who have problems with compulsive behaviour, I mean, people who are addicted to alcohol, smoking, gambling etc. The majority of my patients are smokers, but these days I'm dealing with more and more people addicted to shopping or the Internet.

Presenter: Ah, smokers! What kind of people are most likely to smoke regularly?

Psychologist: Actually, I get people from all possible walks of life. But statistics show that young and middle-aged adults from low income groups are the most likely to smoke. More of them are males who do not have higher education.

Presenter: So, how do you help people to give up this harmful habit?

Psychologist: It's usually a long process, and a lot of patients do not succeed during our first therapeutic course, so they have to try again. Unfortunately, there is no simple formula how to help someone give up smoking. The key to success lies in helping the patient to find strong enough motivation, so it's a very individual process.

Presenter: I see. What makes most people decide to stop smoking?

Psychologist: Well, I'd say some of the most typical factors that encourage people to stop smoking are of financial, social and health nature. But, as I've said, it's very individual.

Presenter: Thank you, Thomas, for talking to us today...

And now a few words about the career expo which is going to take place in our city next week. This annual event is a must for students who are about to finish their university and college courses and need to think seriously about moving into the job market. This year's fair is likely to be the largest one in the whole country. According to the organisers, it will feature over 200 companies offering employment to university graduates in a range of fields.

Wypowiedź 2

I'm in my third year at university and I've been working part-time ever since I got a place at college. Most of the work I've done has been quite simple, you know, jobs like waitressing or working as a shop assistant, which have nothing to do with the course in law I'm doing. I must admit it hasn't been easy to earn some money and do a degree at the same time. I've found that any work leaves me short of time and energy, which affects the quality of my study. I really wish I had enough money to stop working and focus on my degree.

Wypowiedź 4

I started my university course three years ago and during the first two years I didn't need to do any work other than my college work. But last year I was offered a job with an IT company and I decided to give it a go. You see, I'm studying computer programming, so I was hoping to get some valid experience. Plus the company offered quite a good salary, for a student, that is. So far I've really been enjoying the work, and, as I'm quite well-organised, I don't think it gets in the way of studying.

Hi, Tom. I'm sorry to bother you at the weekend, but I'm stuck with my revision for the maths test next week. I've gone through most of the material but the problem is that I missed some classes at the beginning of the month and I don't seem to have any good notes of those lessons. Could you scan them and send them to me by email? Or, preferably, print them for me so I could drop in and pick them up? My printer isn't working too well, I'm afraid. Let me know asap.

Girl: So, what did you think of it? It's much better than the book, isn't it?

Boy: Why would you say that? The book was fantastic, with its complex plot and convincing characters. The film was nowhere near as good. OK, I understand the director needed to leave out some stuff, but as it is, the film and the book seem to be two separate stories.

Girl: I don't see it that way. I think the film has to be easier to follow than the book. Too much detail would make it boring, especially for children.

Boy: Well, the book wasn't meant to be for children! I know it's an adventure story, but it's really serious stuff. Well, the film isn't. I don't think I'll be seeing it ever again!

Yes, the first half must have been disappointing for the spectators. The visitors' team focused on defence and it was difficult for us to create situations to score a goal. Some of the players of the home team aren't looking too good today and we all here in the studio agreed that their coach will be trying for some substitutions in the second half. Let's now review the few interesting moments of the game so far... (fading)

A few days ago my friend told me she was going to enter a beauty contest. We talked about it and eventually had an argument. I mean, what good are such events? They focus on the outside of a person and stress the importance of beauty. So, young girls who watch the contest come to believe that unless they're as attractive as the contestants, they won't be worth much as a person. It's really frustrating to see that the old-fashioned view of women still exists in the modern society.

Tekst 5

Man: It's good to be here at last. I thought we'd never check out and leave the airport.

Woman: Yeah, fortunately the transfer to the town centre was quick. And for once, there was no problem with the bookings. (laughs)

Man: This looks very nice, doesn't it? Very luxurious.

Woman: And the view is amazing. The sea on one side and the picturesque town on the other. Those narrow little streets look lovely!

Man: Yeah, the top floor was a good idea. Expensive, though.

I took my driving test last week and I failed. It went badly from the start. I was so nervous that I kept accelerating and slowing down and the examiner commented on my nervous driving. That didn't make me feel any more confident, believe me! I got so shaky that I didn't see a man walking across the street and the examiner had to brake hard to stop in time. So, that was it. I never got to the parking stage which I'd feared most before the exam. I'll be taking the test again in a few weeks, so wish me good luck.
