A lot of us like travelling, but the reality of the journey sometimes does not come up to our 1.1 _____. Last August, feeling tired of hard work and the hustle and bustle of the city, I decided to get away from it all. I didn't want to get a package holiday, but instead I made up my mind to spend some time in a remote place far away from civilisation. After I 1.2 _____ through lots of ads, I found an offer for a lonely cottage deep in the forest in the south-east of the country. It took me six hours to drive to the village where I met the owner of the cottage. He gave me the key to the cottage and explained that he couldn't take me there in his jeep because it was being repaired, so I'd have to reach the cottage in my own car. As I was determined to go, half an hour later I 1.3 _____ his hand-drawn directions along a narrow forest lane, when the car got stuck in the mud. Try as I might, I couldn't get it moving, so I gave up my futile efforts. Looking at the directions, I concluded that I can't have been far from my destination. Therefore, I decided to leave the car and reach the cottage on foot. Laden with only the absolutely necessary stuff (four large bags!), I got there almost three hours later. Exhausted, I sat down heavily on the porch, totally indifferent to the 1.4 _____ scenery of the wilderness around me.
