Breakfast in the past

Breakfast is an important meal today! But what did people have for breakfast in the past? Let's find out!

Thousands of years ago in China, people ate congee, a typical Chinese rice dish. To make congee, you cook rice in a lot of water. After a long time, the rice breaks and makes the water thick. People ate congee with meat or vegetables in the past, and they still eat it today.

In Egypt, most people started work very early. They needed food that helped them work hard during the day. They used a cereal called emmer to make bread. They ate this bread with vegetables, like onions and garlic.

The Romans often had bread, fruit, cheese and nuts for breakfast. People believed that a small and simple breakfast kept them healthy.

I'm from Greece. On Saturdays, breakfast at home is yummy! Why? Because I cook it!

My grandma taught me to make tiganopsomo – my favourite type of bread. First, I make the dough. When it's ready, I make it into circles and put feta cheese in the centre of each circle. Then I fry the circles, and that's it!

My family and I eat tiganopsomo with olive oil and tomatoes. We also drink orange juice and have yoghurt at breakfast time. I like my yoghurt with a lot of honey!

Breakfast in Venezuela is delicious! At home, my sister and I have arepas before we go to school. What's an arepa? It's a round corn cake that you grill or bake. You can eat your arepa with something on it, like avocado, or you can cut it and put different things inside.

Yesterday, I filled my arepa with egg and avocado. My sister isn't a fan of egg, so she used beans instead. How would you eat YOUR arepa?

I'm Vietnamese. My favourite breakfast is pho – you pronounce it 'fuh'. Pho is soup with noodles, beef and vegetables in it. Some people have this dish for lunch or dinner, but many others eat it in the morning, like me!

It's best to make the soup the night before, so it's ready for the next day. Last night, I helped my dad prepare the soup. We boiled the beef for two hours, then we added the vegetables. I enjoyed cooking with him!

From Paul

To Joanna

Hi Joanna,

Last week, there was a food festival in the city square. It happens every year (1) _____ it's great fun. It was really small when (2) _____ started 10 years ago (3) _____ now it's really popular. There are lots (4) _____ tents with different foods. This year, my favourite was the cheese tent where there were over 200 different cheeses!

Lots of restaurants also had small tents where you could have lunch and dinner. On (5) _____ first night, we went to a vegetarian restaurant tent. I didn't know which dish to choose – cheese pie (6) _____ pasta. I decided to have the pie, and it was the best thing I ate at the festival.

I hope you can come next year.
