Track 01

- Interviewer: Have you ever wondered what the most eccentric collectors look for? From license plates to old newspapers – people around the world collect all sorts of things. Today in the studio we've got a person who knows about strange collectors more than anyone else. Phillip Stowe, welcome.
- Phillip Stowe: Hello. Thanks for having me.
- Interviewer: Tell us please what you do exactly. Is collecting your hobby?
- Phillip Stowe: Well, not any more. In the past I collected Coca Cola bottles, but now I'm only a journalist who writes about weird collections.
- Interviewer: Do you have a blog?
- Phillip Stowe: No, although I must say I'm thinking about starting one pretty soon. But now I work for a newspaper, which sends me wherever collectors meet. So I spend very little time in the office.
- Interviewer: So what is the strangest collection you've ever seen?
- Phillip Stowe: A few years ago I met a woman who collected salt and pepper shakers. I also heard about a man who collects lunchboxes, but I haven't had a chance to meet him yet.
- Interviewer: Is there anything you dislike about your work?
- Phillip Stowe: Sometimes I'd like to stop going to all these places and go back to collecting. I loved it, you see. But you can't love everything about your work, right?
- Interviewer: Phillip, thanks for coming. I wish you all the best in your career.

Track 02

2.1.

When it comes to computer equipment, the two most important things for me are my tablet and the broadband connection. You see, I use them for social reasons. In the evening I usually log on to my favourite sites and chat with my mates or new friends. Most of these sites are blocked in our computer lab, so I can only do it here, in my bedroom.

2.2.

I'm not a computer freak. I mean, I don't go to shops looking for the latest gadgets, like some of my friends. What I find here is quite simply enough. Look at this equipment – it's quite new. The internet connection isn't bad either. The only problem is that the place is full during the break so if you want to use any of these computers you need to wait till the afternoon.

2.3.

I came across an online ad of a clearance sale, so I went to see what they had there. I must have spent all my pocket money. They had everything – from a special plug to access your files wherever you are, through wireless speakers to smart phones the size of a watch. Of course, I couldn't afford most of them, but I'd love to have all that fantastic equipment you can find in some computer labs.

Text 1.

A: And have you seen this one?

B: What is it?

A: 'Hunt'. It's about a man with a mysterious past whose life is in pieces but who tries to put it back together. I've heard it's quite good.

B: Isn't it based on a book?

A: Yes, it is, but I haven't read it. Have you?

B: Yes, I have, but I'd like to see how this director presented the story. Let's rent it then.

A: OK.

Text 2.

Woman: Can I help you?

Boy: Yes. Can I have some painkillers and some cough syrup, please?

Woman: Here you are. Anything else?

Boy: Yes. I'd like something for a fever.

Woman: Is it for you?

Boy: No, for my mum. She's in bed not feeling well.

Woman: OK, here you are. Tell your mum that if this doesn't help and she doesn't feel better within three days, she should see a doctor.

Boy: OK, thanks for the advice.

One of the best smart phone applications I know is the Jog&Fun. There are two versions of the app – a professional one and a free one. And the good news is the producer has now included more features in the free version. That basically means you can spend no money and still use your phone's GPS to track your jogging routes, check the details of your speed and count the calories burnt. If, however, you would like to share these details online or use the app while jogging in a gym, you need to invest some money to get the pro version of the app.
