Track 01

Tekst 1.

Yesterday, on my way home from work, I needed to drop in on my sister to collect something, and, as usual, I parked on a side street near her block of flats. But when I got to the car a few minutes later, I saw a traffic warden waiting beside it. He told me that it was illegal to park there and gave me a L25 fine. I tried to argue with him, but there was nothing doing.

Tekst 2.

Mary: Hello, Peter, it's Mary. Have you got a few minutes to talk, or are you busy?

Peter: Hi, Mary. Nothing important, I'm just doing a bit of tidying up in the flat. I've been thinking about writing a report for my boss since this morning, but, somehow, I just can't get down to it. No, I'm really glad you're calling and, anyway, a few moments' rest will suit me fine. How are you doing? Is everything OK?

Mary: Yes, thanks, I'm fine. I've got some news. I might be getting a job. At last! You know I've been looking for one for a few months now.

Peter: That's great news! You've found something in the paper?

Mary: Actually, I ran into Frank in the supermarket two days ago, and he told me about a vacancy in their accounting department. So I checked it out on their website, called them, and they invited me to attend an interview. I'm going tomorrow, and, believe it or not, I'm really nervous!

Peter: Oh, come on. You've been to quite a few interviews, it'll be nothing new, you'll be fine, I'm sure. And with your qualifications and experience, you should be one of the strongest candidates for the job.

Mary: I know that, but you see, it's quite a good position with a high salary, and I'm afraid there'll be lots of competition for this job. You see what the job market is like now, there are plenty of people in a position similar to mine.

Peter: That's true, but try to sound confident, and make them believe you're the one they're looking for. I know it sounds trivial but that's about the best advice I can give you. And what kind of job is it exactly?

Mary: They're looking for an Assistant to the Chief Accountant. I know it might not sound the most exciting job to someone with an artistic nature like yours, but, for me, it would be ideal at the moment. It's pretty much the same kind of work that I did for my previous company. It goes well with my education, too. I'd really like to get it, I've been out of work for too long.

Peter: I'll keep my fingers crossed. Please call me the first thing after the interview. I'll be dying to know how you've got on.

Mary: I will. I've got an idea, maybe we could have lunch together tomorrow? I'll be able to tell you all about the interview in detail.

Peter: That sounds great! So, the usual place at 1 pm, then?

Mary: OK, see you there, then.

Peter: See you.

Presenter: ... and now back to the studio. With us today is Sally Meers who is a psychologist and counselor. Good morning, Sally. Could you tell our listeners what exactly you do in your line of work?

Sally Meers: Good morning. Well, I used to work as a vocational counselor, you know, giving advice to people who had problems at work or unemployed people. But for the last few years, I've been a marriage guidance counselor and family therapist. Most often, I give advice to married couples whose relationship seems to be breaking up. But the job also involves helping parents who are having difficulties with their children, especially teenagers.

Presenter: Figures show that the divorce rate is rather high nowadays. From your own experience, how can you explain this?

Sally Meers: That's a tough question. Well, to begin with, most of us are used to quick and easy solutions. Divorce seems to be one of these if problems appear. Of course, the true reason for getting divorced is not convenience, but the fact that some couples do not see and handle their problems immediately. These problems usually build up over time and, if that happens, it doesn't matter how hard they try to work things out, it might be too late to save their marriage.

Presenter: So what's the best way of solving problems in a marriage?

Sally Meers: Well, problems naturally lead to arguments, and some people just can't understand why the person they love wants to fight. Of course, most couples realise that they need to express their opinions openly, and there is nothing wrong with arguments as long as the couple make up, forgive each other and get on with their marriage. This can actually be quite healthy for a relationship. Some couples, however, just don't understand this. They feel offended and start separating from their partner. In this case, they might end up splitting up.

Presenter: So, could you tell us what kind of problems are the hardest to solve? I mean, when do you find it most difficult to help people to save their marriage?

Sally Meers: This really depends on individual cases. For some couples, it might be a difficult financial situation. Others, especially men, have problems accepting major changes in their marriage, such as having to stay at home looking after kids. But, in answer to your question, most people cannot accept the situation when their partner has had a relationship outside their marriage. This is really devastating for a marriage.

Presenter: Thank you very much, Sally. Next week, we'll be talking about children from immigrant families.

Our reporter is in front of the cinema at the moment. He's asking people to give their opinions about the films they have come to see.

One

I must say the film was quite good. I wasn't really expecting this, as horror films aren't exactly my cup of tea. So when my friends called me and suggested seeing it, I was going to refuse at first. I can't really say I regret seeing it, though. It had an interesting plot, and some of the special effects were really stunning. And the music, wow, I'm going to get this soundtrack on CD, that's for sure.

Two

Well, I'd been looking forward to seeing the film for months. I've read the novel it's based on, and I absolutely love it. That's why, perhaps, I was expecting too much from the film, and it didn't really come up to my expectations. The adaptation missed some important events from the plot, and the characters were not as convincing as in the book. I'm definitely not going to see it again.

Three

Me and my son were planning to see a new fantasy film today. But my wife got a bit angry, saying that she wasn't going to stay at home alone, and, because she doesn't like this type of film, we changed our choice of film to a comedy. Well, it wasn't all that bad, but, anyway, I'm taking my son to the cinema again tomorrow. We're not going to miss it this time.

Four

I hardly ever go to the cinema to see films which are adaptations of my favourite books because they are rarely good enough. So when I agreed to go and see one with my girlfriend, I was sort of prepared to get disappointed. Well, nothing like that happened. The acting was so brilliant that the characters were even better than I'd imagined they could ever be. The director really did an excellent job on the film.

Five

You know, I have no idea what I can tell you. After reading several reviews, I'd expected the film to be a light comedy, something that's supposed to make you feel relaxed after a hard week's work. But looking at the problems the main character has in the film, I started wondering about my own life, and I feel a little bit confused at the moment.
